Re: Docket 14-28

To Whom It May Concern,

On May 7, 2014 I surveyed all the Ex-Parte filings on the FCC website. These were available for public viewing and clearly shows that the majority of Americans are in favor of reclassifying Internet Service Providers, such as AT&T, as Title 2 Common Carriers.

On May 12, 2014 your Chairman, Tom Wheeler, stated his intention to disregard the wishes of just about everyone in America. Further, his policy decisions do not make any sense at all.

I have compiled the following list of companies and individuals that are in favor of Title 2 Re classification:

It is clear that the FCC Chairman, Tom Wheeler, is not acting in the best interests of America. Should he continue his disastrous policies, he will incite America to call for his immediate removal from office.

Protecting Net Neutrality is important to me because I believe that internet access is a necessity for modern life, but will be restricted if we don't establish common carrier status for ISPs. Data and information are not finite resources, and we need to keep access to them open and affordable to all. Recently, the FCC has proposed to allow a "fast lane" for Internet Service Providers to charge more for services that are currently included in most data packages. This will cripple many people's ability to get the content and communication they need for everything from building small business to improving community involvement. ISPs were subsidized by taxpayers for a broadband infrastructure meant to provide access and affordability to all citizens, however, they are now strangling taxpayers to pay again for services businesses and citizens have already paid for. Companies already pay for the bandwidth they use, consumers already pay for internet access, and now ISPs are trying to get consumers and companies to pay double because they are unwilling to invest their large profits in their own networks. Ending net neutrality will do irrevocable damage to economic and social growth in America. I urge you to reject the FCC's "fast lane" proposal, and instead begin the process of establishing ISPs as common carriers just like phone service and public utilities. Ignoring this problem will devastate the public's ability to communicate and contribute to your campaign, and any number of other public goods. Thank you very much for your time, and again, I urge you to defend and protect net neutrality.

Hi,

I would like to request that you reclassify ISPs as a common carrier so as to protect net neutrality.

To Whom it May Concern:

I am writing to express my deep concern about the proposed changes to laws pertaining to the Internet as outlined in chairman Tom Wheeler's net neutrality rules, set to be voted on on date May 15, 2014.

After reviewing this matter carefully I must protest these proposed changes. The Internet has, for decades now, been a great extension and pathway towards communication, human knowledge, and in many cases even political knowledge and communication which have served to enhance the American democratic process. Much has been learned, much has been done, and many lives enriched through it's means of communication and connecting of the human element to each other.

Until now, Americans have been able to rest assured that their Internet traffic is treated equally under law. This reassurance has lead many into the realm of the Internet under the knowledge that they pay their dues to their ISP of choice to be able to access information and people at the click of a mouse -- equally with other users and companies (albeit limited to their own connection speed). These proposed changes would be devastating to that equality for the common user and serves only as an avenue for telecommunication companies such as Verizon and Comcast to further gouge their customers. As well, in business, it provides unfair advantage to those companies who choose to pay more for their services. In short, I feel that this is nothing short of a dead giveaway to the telecommunications industry while the only ones who suffer under these regulations are the consumers -- average Americans like myself.

In a time when America is expanding it's broadband Internet capabilities to more regions (and therefore opening up those same opportunities to areas in regions that, until recently, have had limited Internet access), doesn't Tom Wheeler and the other FCC commissioners believe that we should be expanding this capability and not limiting the vast majority of users?

The future of the open Internet is in your hands. And yet you have proposed rules that would actually break it.

Your proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement pay-for-priority schemes that would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls.

I urge you to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.

This plan is not only in direct contradiction of the mission of the FCC, but it is clear based on their proposal that they are not working in service of the people but are working in service of cable internet companies - or they're trying to secure future employment there.

"Dear Consumer" Pshhhh. I am a CITIZEN. You work for ME.

I'm a strong supporter of the Open Internet.

I am SO mad. Most CITIZENS feel the same way. Stop with all this nonsense. STOP. This is supposed to be America, the best country ever, but right now this is so ridiculous that I just want to move.

If you would like to debate the issue, email me back at isaacprivett@gmail.com.

On a serious note, I understand the business perspective of the ones trying to get rid of net neutrality, but the internet is one of the few places that the masses feel totally free. Get rid of that outlet and who knows what kind of effects that would have. Comcast is quickly becoming a dangerous monopoly and their lobby money should not determine the life of the people.

Americans demand, and President Obama pledged, real net neutrality.

This requires:

- 1) FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler should resign or be removed from his position. The recent policy proposal from the FCC on net neutrality enables service providers to blackmail content providers with fees for the delivery of content that the subscriber already paid them for. Such a proposal is consistent with Wheeler's former role as head of National Cable Television Association but it is a violation of the chairman's responsibility to the public.
- 2) Internet service has become an essential tool for work, commerce, and the exercise of free speech. Broadband providers use public rights of way to string cable across the country and the space to do so is limited. Accordingly the government has an obligation to ensure that this natural monopoly is not abused.
- 3) Almost no households in America have a more than one provider of real (> 6 mpbs) broadband internet access. The FCC has done nothing to promote competition for this critical service.
- 4) Internet Service should be regulated as a "telecommunications service". The companies that operate the network must not be allowed to discriminate regarding the physical devices connected, or the type of traffic transmitted over the network. For almost all people, there is only one high speed 'pipe' available to them. The operator should be compensated fairly for operating the pipe infrastructure but they must not be permitted to control who and what can be access or to artificially affect the throughput; just as Ma Bell was obligated to connect people wanting long distance service from Sprint and other providers.
- 5) Any network services over and above the raw transmission of data through the network should be provided by third parties; without discrimination based on on content, source, or destination.
- 6) Broadband providers should be permitted to inspect traffic only for the purpose of routing it to it's intended destination and not otherwise, scan, store, forward or share it.
